Chadwick the Crab

PRISCILLA CUMMINGS
Illustrated by A. R. COHEN

Chadwick the Crab is the story of a Chesapeake Bay blue crab who yearns for adventure and wants to be a star at the aquarium in Baltimore.

Chadwick is a happy crab, who enjoys his life beneath the beautiful blue waters of the Chesapeake Bay. Indeed, he has many friends there, including quiet Orville Oyster, Matilda, a fussy, near-sighted egret, and Toulouse the French Canada Goose. But when cold weather approaches and Chadwick is faced with another winter of napping at the bottom of the bay, his eyes droop and his spirit sags. Chadwick hates to admit it, but the crabs' winter nap is so boring. He resolves to find himself an adventure. When Bernie the Sea Gull returns one day from a trip to Baltimore and tells the crabs about the aquarium in the city's bustling inner harbor Chadwick's eyes light up. What fun it would be to spend every day teaching school children and others how crabs live, Chadwick imagines. But how does a common blue crab get to the aquarium? And what do Chadwick's friends think of such an ambitious idea? Not all of them are convinced Chadwick's proper place is in an aquarium, particularly not Esmerelda, the prettiest girl crab in all of Shady Creek.

A book for children and adults alike—for anyone who loves the Chesapeake Bay.

MARINE LIFE OF SAUDI ARABIA

GUNNAR BEMERT AND RUPERT ORMOND

The Red Sea Coast of Saudi Arabia is fringed with coral reefs of dazzling beauty, teeming with marine life. In Red Sea Coral Reefs Gunnar Bemert, a professional photographer, and Rupert Ormond, a research biologist, introduce the reader to the fascination and splendour of this undersea world. The authors explain something of the biology of the seemingly endless variety of corals, fishes and other marine life and explain the principles by which the coral reef as a whole works. Written for both the general reader and as a guide for those already diving in the area, the book contains chapters on coral reefs, coral animals, invertebrates, fishes and their variety and behaviour, as well as aspects of diving in the Red Sea; how and where to dive, possible dangers from poisonous animals and sharks, and photography.

'... for non-specialists and for specialists who need background outside their own field, it is a very good introduction to reef life in the Red Sea and incidentally much of the Indopacific.'—Brian R. Rosen, New Scientist

'... a really expert piece of work . . . A truly beautiful book and one that no diver should miss, whether he has been there or not.'—Sub Aqua Scene
The book can be many things to many kinds of reader. All will find it fascinating, but its advice to divers on how and where to dive, equipment and on underwater photography will undoubtedly make it a much-sought book among divers.'—Alan Cameron, Lloyd's List

NEWBERRY: The Life and Times of a Maine Clam

by Vincent G. Dethier

All children (and adults, too) will want to meet Newberry, a most unusual clam who wears a purple muffler and lives in a mudflat near Blue Hill, Maine. Newberry leads a surprisingly adventurous life: a friendly cricket tries to teach him to sing; he discovers a note in a bottle (we won't reveal here what it says); and he comes to the conclusion, after finding a million-year-old fossil, that Maine really belongs to the clams. This is one of those rare and delightful books that makes us all glad there is still a touch of the child in us. Ages 6 - 9. Paperbound. 0-89272-085-9. $6.95

PRISCILLA CUMMINGS

Illustrated by A. R. COHEN

Chadwick the Crab is the story of a Chesapeake Bay blue crab who yearns for adventure and wants to be a star at the aquarium in Baltimore.

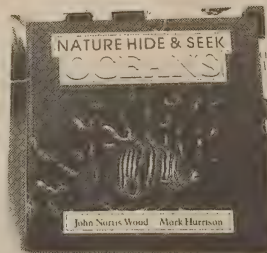

Chadwick is a happy crab, who enjoys his life beneath the beautiful blue waters of the Chesapeake Bay. Indeed, he has many friends there, including quiet Orville Oyster; Matilda, a fussy, near-sighted egret; and Toulouse the French Canada Goose. But when cold weather approaches and Chadwick is faced with another winter of napping at the bottom of the bay, his eyes droop and his spirit sags. Chadwick hates to admit it, but the crabs' winter nap is so boring. He resolves to find himself an adventure. When Bernie the Sea Gull returns one day from a trip to Baltimore and tells the crabs about the aquarium in the city's bustling inner harbor Chadwick's eyes light up. What fun it would be to spend every day teaching school children and others how crabs live, Chadwick imagines. But how does a common blue crab get to the aquarium? And what do Chadwick's friends think of such an ambitious idea? Not all of them are convinced Chadwick's proper place is in an aquarium, particularly not Esmerelda, the prettiest girl crab in all of Shady Creek.

A book for children and adults alike—for anyone who loves the Chesapeake Bay.

Priscilla Cummings, a native of Massachusetts, lives in Annapolis. An award-winning newspaper reporter and feature writer, she is currently working on a novel.

Mr. Cohen divides his time between teaching, both at a public high school and at a community college; freelancing as an artist/illustrator; and his own "personal artwork."

Larval Forms and Other Zoological Verses

Walter Garstang

Foreword by Michael C. LaBarbera

The Ballad of the Veliger, or How the Gastropod Got its Twist

The Veliger's a lively tar, the liveliest afloat.
A whirling wheel on either side propels his little boat;
But when the danger signal warns his bustling submarine,
He stops the engine, shuts the port, and drops below unseen.
He's witnessed several changes in pelagic motor-craft:
The first he sailed was just a tub, with a tiny cabin aft.
An Archi-mollusk fashioned it, according to his kind.
He'd always stowed his gills and things in a mantle-sac behind.
Young Archi-mollusks went to sea with nothing but a vellum—
A sort of autocycling hoop, instead of pram—to wheel 'em;
And spinning round, they one by one acquired parental features,
A shell above, a foot below—the queerest little creatures.
But when by chance they brushed against their neighbors in the briny.
Coelenterates with stinging threads and Anthröpods so spiny,
By one weak spot betrayed, alas, they fell an easy prey—
Their soft preoral lobes in front could not be tucked away!
Their feet, you see, amidships, next the cuddly-hole abaft.
Drew in at once, and left their heads exposed to every shaft.
So Archi-mollusks dwindled, and the race was sinking fast.
When by the merest accident salvation came at last.
A fleet of fry turned out one day, eventful in the sequel.
Those left and right retractors on the two sides were unequal:
Their starboard halliards fixed astern alone supplied the head.
While those set apart were spread abeam and served the back instead.
Predaceous foes, still drifting by in numbers unabated,
Were baffled now by tactics which their dining plans frustrated.
Their prey upon alarm collapsed, but promptly turned about.
With the tender morsel safe within and the horny foot, without.
This manoeuvre (vide Lamurck) speeded up with repetition.
Until the parts affected gained a rhythmical condition.
And torsion, needed now no more a stimulating stab,
Will take its predetermined course in a watchglass in the lab.
In this way, then, the Veliger, triumphantly asked,
Acquired his cabin forward holding all his sailing crew—
A Trochosphere in armour cased, with a foot to work the hatch,
And double screws to drive ahead with smartness and despatch.
But when the first new Veligers came home again to shore,
And settled down as Gastropods, with mantle-sac afore,
The Archi-mollusk sought a cleft his shame and grief to hide, Crunched horribly his horny teeth, gave up the ghost, and died.

In writing these unique and clever verses about larvae, Garstang meant not only to amuse fellow scientists but also to express his own ideas about larval biology and evolution. This edition includes Garstang's important 1929 paper, in which he put forward his theory that natural selection, and therefore evolution, may occur at larval stages as well as in adult forms of life. Both students and scientists will find the book a delightful if rather unorthodox illumination of questions about ontogeny and phylogeny. "The Ballad of the Veliger" is a sample of what Garstang holds in store.
